

She came home smiling, full of enthusiasm, telling us tales of all her new adventures and friendships.

It really has helped his confidence and social skills.

I have never seen her so excited over something and emotional.

I can't actually put into words as to how much she enjoyed it and the friendships that she made.

Feedback from foster carers

They were talking non-stop of all the exciting activities they participated in.

She hasn't stopped talking about all she did and how much she wants to return if she's able to.

This has helped hugely with her confidence, to share experiences with other children who feel like she does and an opportunity to know people that understand how her life is a bit more complex.

The kids were all in the same boat and it seemed to normalise and make things easier for her. She finds it difficult making friends, as 'regular' kids don't get her and she feels isolated. It was so not the case this week.

He suffers from anxiety and speaking with him when I collected him, I was amazed that he had tried all the activities and was so proud of his achievements.

The boys felt less different when they came home as they'd had the chance to meet other children who were similar to them. It was lovely for them to see that they're not alone.
